In light of the EU Deforestation Regulation (EUDR), which will be fully enforced by December 2026, Indonesian businesses across several sectors, including rubber, palm oil, coffee, cocoa, timber, and soy, will be directly impacted by new requirements on deforestation-free production, traceability, and due diligence.

The regulatory landscape also continues to evolve, including recent Indonesian developments on geospatial data sharing, reinforcing the need for companies to assess how traceability and geolocation data are collected, used, and shared.

Given your organisation's role in Indonesia's supply chains, particularly in relation to sustainability, traceability, and market access, we believe your participation would bring valuable perspectives to the dialogue. We also hope the Masterclass will provide practical insights that may support your organisation's preparation for EUDR-related requirements.

To support private-sector readiness and build practical understanding of key EUDR requirements, including traceability systems, geolocation data, due diligence frameworks, and EU market expectations, we would like to cordially invite one representative from your organisation to attend this Masterclass.

The programme will feature expert presentations, interactive discussions, and a panel discussion on Data Transparency for EUDR in ASEAN Context, with contributions from Access-Europe, SystemEarth, and invited stakeholders. The session will also share practical lessons from Thailand's EUDR readiness journey and market insights relevant to businesses preparing for EUDR implementation.
